‘Hollywood magic’ to pay a visit to JCS crew

Autobiographical film “MEN of HONOR” scheduled to premiere here on video April 8

Story by LT Chito Peppler

20th Century Fox Studios will be releasing “Men of Honor” (MOH) in VHS/DVD nationwide on Apr 10th and will be having a premiere (brief ceremony and screening) onboard JOHN C. STENNIS on Sun, Apr 8th at 1300 with phenomenal actress Charlize Theron and legendary Master Chief Carl Brashear, Ret., attending. Everyone is invited.

Just who is Carl Brashear? Just ask HMCS (SW/AW) Charles Henning who is inspired by his story of persistence and bravery. Brashear spent over two years writing hundreds of letters to get the chance to become a Navy diver. He also encountered many obstacles and overcame them and ended up serving the nation and the Navy in the dark recesses of the ocean in the dangerous business of salvage recovery.

Brashear

What made the story even more impressive was Brashear’s indefatigable commitment after an amputation of his leg. Despite his loss, he remained on active duty and demonstrated that he could still perform his duties and not jeopardize the safety of his team.

Fox Studios will host a celebration in Hangar Bay 2 on April 8 at 1:00 p.m. to commemorate the release of “Men of Honor” on VHS/DVD nationwide. Actress Charlize Theron and Master Chief Carl Brashear, Ret., are scheduled to attend. The movie will be shown on SITE TV after the party. Don’t be late!

corpsman, I feel honored to be a part of a profession that gives second chances to those sick or injured," Henning said. "Master Chief Brashear's story highlights how I can touch someone whether at sea or on shore."

"It is vital that our values of honor, courage and commitment be constantly reinforced and upheld," said CDR Dave Gillis, JCS senior medical officer.

Sailors will also be treated to a rare look into the movie from the point of view of Carl Brashear who will provide his life testimony marked by persistence and bravery. In keeping with Navy core values, Master Chief Brashear will be conducting a reenlistment ceremony for those interested.

And who is Charlize Theron? As legend has it, Charlize Theron was discovered by an agent while fighting with a bank manager on Hollywood Boulevard. Eighteen and starving, Theron purportedly got into the argument after the manager refused to cash her check. The outburst caught the agent's attention, and eight months later Theron got her first acting job. Since then, she has become one of the fastest rising stars in Hollywood, thanks to a combination of talent and the blonde, statuesque good looks so loved by the camera.

Born August 7, 1975, Theron was raised on a farm in Bononi, South Africa. Trained as a ballet dancer, she was sent to Milan at sixteen to become a model following the death of her father. Theron, tired of modeling, went back to her first love, dancing, which resulted in a move to New York to dance with the Joffrey Ballet. Unfortunately, her dancing career was halted by a knee injury, which led Theron—at her mother's behest—to travel to Los Angeles to try her luck with acting. After a long, unprofitable struggle, fate smiled upon Theron in the form of the aforementioned bank encounter.

Following a bit part in 1994's Children of the Corn III, Theron found recognition with Two Days in the Valley (1996). The film wasn't particularly successful, but it gave Theron both much-needed exposure and critical praise. It also acted as the stepping stone to her first leading role, that of Keanu Reeves' wife in The Devil's Advocate (1997). The film drew poor reviews, but Theron's performance was widely singled out for praise, and subsequent Mighty Joe Young (1998) netted Theron more positive notices. Theron's ascent was confirmed with her casting in Woody Allen Bios's 1998 cameo-fest Celebrity and in The Astronaut's Wife. With her performance as a perpetually aroused supermodel, Theron shone in a role seemingly designed to allow her to flaunt the natural attributes, which played a significant role in the success she had so long coveted.

So bring your friends and family to see Carl and Charlize next Sunday in a ceremony in Hangar Bay 2. Carl and Charlize will officially kick off the VHS/DVD release nationwide, then you will be given the unique opportunity to meet, and interact with these superb role models and great American Heroes. Wear your uniform with pride to get into the Premiere and bring this issue to get a free autograph. You will come out both invigorated and encouraged.

MAN OVERBOARD! MAN OVERBOARD!

The ready life boat crew returns from a successful recovery of "OSCAR" the floating dummy, during a man overboard drill held while the John C. Stennis was conducting a drill.

When 'man overboard' is called away, it could be for numerous reasons, someone could have thrown a trash bag or a chem-light over the side. Or someone could have actually fallen over. In either case an accurate, quick muster is essential to ensure that all crewmembers and ship riders are safe.

Ten minutes is the allotted time for this muster. So remember, expedient quick muster to ensure the safety of all.

To All:

From the "Fighting Grapes" of V-4 Division I extend a hearty Thank You to all that assisted in the recent NAVSEA / NAVAIR Fuels Certification. We could not have accomplished this milestone without the specific help of AIMD's Calibration Laboratory (Fuel System gages), Supply Departments Stock Control (support of vital parts) as well as the hard working Galley folks who kept us in box lunches for two days. We could not have accomplished this milestone in support of the JCS mission without the extra effort and "Look Ahead" Spirit put forward by all of you. Once again, On behalf of all the "Fighting Grapes" Thanks!

Watch That E-mail! Your Words May Come Back to Haunt You

By JO1 Joseph Gunder, Navy Wire Service

WASHINGTON (NWS) — More eyes may be reading your private e-mail than you intended. That's the message Navy leadership wants to get across.

In NAVADMIN 06/01, Sailors were warned about the potential hazards from indiscriminate e-mail use. Most e-mail goes out over an unclassified network (also known as a Non-classified Internet Protocol Routed Network, or NIPRNET), and is subject to prying eyes — that's the message from the office of the director of Space, Information Warfare, Command and Control (N6), Vice Adm. Richard W. Mayo.

"E-mail is not transitory and does not disappear like a verbal exchange," warned the message. "E-mail is not private and can easily be forwarded and modified beyond the control of any individual."

Specifically, Navy leaders want Sailors to consider Operational Security (OPSEC) before they hit that "send" button. A single e-mail from a Sailor on a ship sent to someone at home can be forwarded to hundreds of recipients, and that message can be reforwarded to thousands more. This increases the chances that a potential adversary could gain some inside knowledge of naval operations and tactics that they could use to their advantage.

The NAVADMIN added, that a description of an event in an e-mail, may, by itself, or along with other data, compromise missions, capability, data or damage assessments.

"If in doubt," the message reads, "consult the chain of command and err on the side of caution."

But possible enemies aren't the only ones interested in Navy e-mail.

According to Lt. Jane Alexander of the Navy's Office of Information, Sailors aboard USS Cole (DDG 67) were shocked to find out that their personal e-mail messages sent home to family and friends were forwarded to media to be used as quoted material in news stories — without the members' permission.

"What people don't realize is that once an e-mail leaves the ship, it enters the public domain," said Alexander. "And who knows where it will end up."

The other e-mail-related point that Navy leaders want to get out is that e-mail on a government interest system should conform to Navy policy. "Navy policy prohibits racist, sexist, threatening, pornographic, personal business, subversive or politically partisan communications."

Bottom line, according to the NAVADMIN, is that e-mail from Sailors reflects on the professionalism of the Navy. Members have to watch what goes into, or is attached to, e-mails to keep data out of the wrong hands and to keep up a sharp appearance.

Got Talent?

Singers and musicians are needed for a ship band. All styles wanted, from rock, hip hop to alternative.
